SAUDI OIL MINISTER DISCUSSES RISE IN PRICES

WASHINGTON (March 8, 2011) — His Excellency Minister Ali Al-Naimi, the Minister of Petroleum and Mineral Resources for the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia discussed recent concerns surrounding crude oil prices and reserves in an interview with the Saudi Press Agency. During the interview, he outlined the ways the Kingdom is working to ensure stability in the oil market and discussed the recent surge in prices.

Minister Al-Naimi stated that Saudi Arabia has 3.5 million barrels-per-day of spare crude oil production capacity readily available if necessary. In addition, he highlighted that the Kingdom can use various storage locations across the world to provide increased flexibility to meet additional requirements from the global market.

Regarding pricing, Minister Al-Naimi said recent crude oil prices are not supported by basic supply-demand balances and have more to do with financial speculation and unwarranted negative supply sentiment than industry fundamentals. In addition, he emphasized that at the present the market remains well-supplied.

Minister Al-Naimi concluded by listing the steps the Kingdom has taken to ensure continued stability in the petroleum market:

- Supplied all of its customers' normal crude oil requirements.
- Met all incremental demand from its customers.
- Taken steps to develop a special crude oil blend which is closer in quality to the supplies which have been lost by utilizing mixes from its different fields which are lighter in API gravity and lower in sulfur content, helping to minimize crude quality concerns.
- Stored additional quantities of crude oil at various storage facilities and increasing inventories in Sidi Kerir (Egypt), Rotterdam (the Netherlands) and Okinawa (Japan) to better meet any additional call on its production.

Saudi Oil Minister Says Oil Supply Losses Will be Offset

WASHINGTON, February 23 -- The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia's Minister of Petroleum and Mineral Resources Ibrahim Al-Naimi has assured global markets that Saudi Arabia and other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) have the capacity of oil to offset supply losses due to crises unfolding around the world. Saudi Arabia alone currently has a surplus supply of approximately 4 million barrels per day.

In a press conference yesterday following the Ministerial Extraordinary Meeting of the International Energy Forum (IEF), Al-Naimi reassured the global community that political or economic disruptors that have taken place around the world have not affected oil supply so far. "Right now there is absolutely no shortage of supply," Minister Al-Naimi said. However, should supply diminish because of any disruption, Saudi Arabia and OPEC will be ready to meet that shortage.

Saudi Arabian Ambassador to the United States Adel bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir reaffirmed the Kingdom's long-standing policy of maintaining stable oil production. "Saudi Arabia is committed to keeping oil prices and the market as stable as possible despite disruptions that may arise," Ambassador Al-Jubeir said.

The IEF is the world's largest gathering of energy ministers. All 86 nations represented at the conference signed and approved the IEF Charter, which called for international energy cooperation and a commitment to open dialogue.

In their concluding statement energy ministers said, "Mitigating energy market volatility and future uncertainty remains of crucial importance to stabilize energy markets and facilitate energy investment, which would also benefit the recovery of the global economy."
